No contest
Dawkins will step down and return to role as community advocate so family can finally unite under one roof

BY MICHELLE KIBIGER
For five years, they’ve had a high chair, a set of toys, and a crib at each house.
Some nights they’d stay at her house, and some nights they’d stay at his.
But for Rep. Andy Dawkins (DFL-St. Paul), and his wife, Sen. Ellen Anderson (DFL-St. Paul), the time has come for their family to live under the same roof.

And that means Dawkins will not seek reelection this November.

“I made a promise to the family that when the kids would go to school we would live in just one house,” Dawkins, 51, said. He and Anderson have two children — Nick, 2, and, Jack, 4, who will begin kindergarten this fall.

But the parting is bittersweet for the eight-term legislator.

“I have loved every day of this job,” he said. “I hate the idea of leaving.

First elected to the House in a November 1987 special election, Dawkins filled the district-65A seat vacated by former Speaker of the House Fred Norton (DFL-St. Paul) upon his appointment to the state Court of Appeals.

Originally from Chicago, Dawkins came to Minnesota in the late 1960s to attend college at Hamline University in St. Paul. He said he was impressed by the open Minnesota political system, including precinct caucuses.

Ultimately, he moved to Philadelphia to work with homeless youth while attending law school.
But he knew he would return to Minnesota.

And that’s what he did in 1978, establishing both a neighborhood law practice in the Frogtown neighborhood of St. Paul and a personal goal of gaining election to the Legislature within 10 years.

Dawkins said it was important to him that he get to know the neighborhood and the concerns of residents, so he volunteered for a number of community organizations and the DFL party.

Since his election, Dawkins has served on several House committees, including those governing capital investment, family and civil law, energy and regulated industries, environment and natural resources, financial institutions and insurance, housing, jobs and economic development, and taxes.

Dawkins is also remembered for when he vowed not to cut his hair until funding for governmental functions shifted away from property taxes. Within a year, higher income tax revenues provided more balance between the two taxes, he said.

He sponsored youth works legislation to provide college tuition to students volunteering in communities, much like the AmeriCorps program; the Great Northern Corridor economic development project; and a homeownership program for urban and low-income residents.

Dawkins also sponsored several measures in an effort to raise awareness of drug crimes and prostitution problems in Frogtown and to study racial bias in the state court system.

In 1993, Dawkins took a shot at the St. Paul mayor’s office, challenging Norm Coleman, who defeated Dawkins and served two terms as mayor.

Dawkins said he encouraged several community members last fall to start looking for candidates because of the possibility he would not run again. Several candidates have emerged, and he said he’s looking forward to the race.

His advice to his successor: establish specific goals and stay focused until they are accomplished; respect and use the legislative process, all the while holding to personal principles.

“To get there, sometimes you have to do things that people don’t think lead to that,” Dawkins said, referring to the necessary decisions legislators make to support projects in order to gain support from other legislators for their goals.

Rep. Ron Abrams (R-Minnetonka) echoed Osthoff’s comments about Dawkins’ effectiveness in working across partisan lines.

“He has contributed a great deal to public policy in Minnesota over the last 15 years,” said Abrams. “I consider him a very good friend. I will miss him a great deal.”

Grace Dawkins, left, wipes away a tear as her son, Rep. Andy Dawkins, center, reminisces March 26 about his legislative career. Dawkins’ wife, Sen. Ellen Anderson, right, holds their 4-year-old son Jack during his comments.

PHOTO BY TOM OLMSCHEID

Stepping Down
Rep. Andy Dawkins
DFL
District 65A — St. Paul
Terms: 8
Career notes: Dawkins served one term as chair of the Family and Civil Law Division of the House Judiciary Committee during 1997-98. He sponsored legislation to help divorced parents develop parenting plans and to establish the working family tax credit, which he considers among his primary achievements.

Session Weekly
March 29, 2002