Local Government Information Network

The Local Government Information Network (LOGIN) is a computer database developed under the auspices of Control Data Corporation which provided "practical information that can help local governments to lower costs and improve performance by using a particular policy, program, professional expert or service product." Section I of this bibliography provides a brief sampling of the projects described in the LOGIN database relating to economic development techniques currently being tried by local governments throughout the world.

In the interest of space and time, only a brief sample of the large number of projects available is provided here. In searching the database, the Legislative Reference Library found that limiting the data search to items updated since January 1981 produced the following numbers of items:

FREE TRADE ZONES = 5 items
BUSINESS ATTRACTION = 318 items
SEED MONEY = 42 items
FINANCING PROGRAMS = 323 items
TAX INCENTIVES = 169 items
INCUBATOR BUSINESSES = 15 items
TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE TO BUSINESS = 8 items
PRIVATE INDUSTRY = 99 items
RURAL OR CITY VENTURE = 6 items
JOB CREATION = 220 items

For further information on the projects listed herein or on the other projects noted above, please contact the Legislative Reference Library.

The project summarized in this paper, "THE JOB GENERATION PROCESS," represents an effort to understand and to bridge the gap between micro- and macro-analysis in order to develop economic policies that will generate jobs for the people and places that need them without causing inflation. The database for this research, information on 5.6 million business establishments (about 82% of all private sector employment in the U.S.), records for the years 1969, 1972, 1974, and 1976, each firm's size, age, corporate affiliation, location, and sales. By aggregating establishments in any given place, this research makes possible detailed descriptions of how economic change occurs in that locale. This brief summary highlights the major findings of the work, which was organized into three broad categories: 1) components of change, 2) job generation, and 3) interregional control. Summarizing the initial data analysis, the author finds that few of the net new jobs generated in the U.S. economy are generated by the larger, known corporations, but rather by small, independent, volatile firms. The implications of this finding for economic development policy and administration are discussed.

A report, "JOB CREATION IN CITIES," reviews the broad patterns of the job generation process revealed by analysis of data of 5.6 million business establishments, then examines how the process works within metropolitan areas. It examines, specifically, neighborhood phenomena within metropolitan areas and the case of minority-owned enterprise. The metropolitan areas selected for this micro view are: Boston, Worcester, Hartford, New Haven, Rochester, Dayton, Baltimore, Charlotte (NC), Greenville (SC), and Houston. Components of employment change are tabulated for these areas, with central city/suburban breakouts, along with computations of the aggregate annual employment gain and loss rates and business establishment death rates. In addition, 10 classes of metropolitan area neighborhoods are defined and similar data are aggregated into these neighborhood categories. Describing the picture that emerges, Birch observes, "The larger, frequently manufacturing-oriented businesses are expanding their employment base in economically prosperous, growing areas and are, at the margin, abandoning the older areas as sites to do business...the older areas...are relying heavily on smaller businesses, predominantly in the trade and service sectors, to take up the slack floor space vacated by the larger companies and to keep the job base somewhat stable." Extensive appendices provide detailed data developed for these and other analyses.

- T 2037 RURAL VENTURES, Inc. is a consortium of businesses, religious organizations, individuals and other organizations incorporated as a for-profit company to plan and manage rural development projects, primarily to help small scale farmers.
- T 2038 The Minnesota SEED CAPITOL Fund, Inc. addresses the problem of financing for small technologically innovative enterprises.
- T 2040 The Toledo CITY VENTURE Project combines the City Venture Corp. consortium along with a strong neighborhood organization, a committed business community and local, state and federal contracts to revitalize a section of urban Toledo, Ohio.
- T 2045 A Business and Technology (BTC) is a new kind of business facility, often called an "INCUBATOR" for assisting emerging small businesses.
- T 2204 Detroit Renaissance, an organization, comprised of chief executives of LEADING AREA CORPORATIONS, was formed to lead the physical and economic revitalization of the City of Detroit. Compiled by president's task force on private sector initiatives.
- T 2211 Alliance for business and counties is a PUBLIC-PRIVATE PARTNERSHIP which coordinates the economic development of the Scioto County, Ohio area. Compiled by president's task force on private sector initiatives.
- T 2227 Skid row DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION engages in economic activities that will produce income to support social services for the needy residents of Los Angeles, CA. Compiled by President's Task Force on Private Sector Initiatives.

- T 2633 Minnesota SEED CAPITAL Fund addresses the problem of financing for small technologically innovative enterprises. Compiled by president's task force on private sector initiatives.
- T 2642 The MINNESOTA COOPERATION OFFICE (M.C.O.) is organized to assist inventors and entrepreneurs who have a product or technology that has the potential basis for a significant sized company (e.g., potential revenues of one million dollars per year after first year or operation and five to ten million dollars per year after the fifth year). By applying the knowledge, experience and contacts of its staff, board of directors, client advisory board and supporting organizations, the M.C.O. can improve the chances of success of its clients. The M.C.O. program can help in initial evaluations, business planning, management and staffing needs and obtaining financing. During its first two years, the M.C.O. received over 400 inquiries from across the State of Minnesota.
- T 10004 A prime target for cities wishing to attract industries to create jobs and revenues is the field of HIGH-TECHNOLOGY industries which are clean, employ a variety of personnel and are fast-growing. Summarized from planning.
- T 10005 While HIGH-TECHNOLOGY INDUSTRIES are now clustered in ten general areas around the country, several other areas are using various strategies to attract these desirable industries. Summarized from planning.

- T 10007 Local governments are looking at the establishment of FOREIGN TRADE ZONES, sometimes in conjunction with enterprise zones, as a new development tool. Summarized from Washington Business in the Washington Post.
- T 10412 The Philadelphia INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION, a quasi-public non-profit group of city officials, investors and industrialists, has used a city land bank to stimulate industrial expansion. The project created or retained over 113,000 jobs, and caused the redevelopment of over 50 million square feet of industrial space. Information compiled by HUD Capacity Sharing Program.
- T 10418 A large manufacturing firm agreed with officials in Portland, to hire for its new local facility all workers trained at city expense to the firm's specifications; a unique "FIRST SOURCE" AGREEMENT that brought well over 450 jobs. Information compiled by HUD Capacity Sharing Program.
- T 10419 Volusia County, FL has a center for small business, which is a product of a joint effort between PRIVATE INDUSTRY COUNCIL and Daytona Beach Community College, which will offer workshops and other aids to small businesses based on a profile of the pattern of economic decline in the area. Information compiled by HUD Capacity Sharing Program.

- T 10440 LEADING BUSINESSES in San Francisco financed a STRATEGIC PLANNING EFFORT on the future and finances of the city which has gathered important economic data for the city; city/business relations have improved as a result of this process. Information compiled by HUD Capacity Sharing Program.
- T 10838 Nassau County, NY, made itself responsible for mediating private sector labor disputes in order to assure potential businesses that their operations will not be interrupted by COSTLY LABOR DISPUTES. Information compiled by the National Association of Counties.
- T 10850 Prince George County, MD, formed a Prince George's Travel Promotion Council to PROMOTE TOURISM. The board consists of people from the public sector and the private sector. Information compiled by the National Association of Counties.
- T 10861 Chippewa County, MI, was faced with the loss of 700 civilian jobs and the reuse of a $700 million facility when Kinchelde Air Force Base closed. They established a COUNTY ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT Corporation to take actions which have resulted in new jobs, reuse of part of the base, and an industrial park on the remainder of the base. From information compiled by the National Association of Counties.
- T 10880 The Office of Economic Development, Westchester County, NY, published a promotional picture story on the unique lifestyle and facilities available in Westchester County to ATTRACT INDUSTRY and commerce and to help existing business to expand. From Information compiled by the National Association of Counties.

- T 10888 The BUSINESS ASSISTANCE SERVICE (BAS) of Rensselaer County, NY, was formed to help small businesses use government programs and meet regulations. BAS also provides financial and business practices assistance. From information compiled by the National Association of Counties.

In light of the current reductions in federal assistance to cities, local governments are looking for new ways to finance economic development programs. A survey by the National Council for Urban Economic Development has indicated that local governments are becoming more entrepreneurial in economic development endeavors. This is characterized by an increase in the number of quasi-public development corporations, which increase the chances for private-sector involvement.
