Dear Minnesota Recyclers:

It has been two years since the Minnesota Office of Waste Management (OWM) published a recycling directory and in that time Minnesota's recycling landscape has changed considerably.

The passage of comprehensive waste reduction and recycling legislation in 1989 and the advent of many new local collection programs are two key developments.

To help increase recycling, the OWM has made a commitment to providing technical assistance to the recycling community. Publication of the 1991 Minnesota Recycling Directory is an integral part of this commitment.

The directory reflects the changes in the recycling field. It provides the recycling community with a complete listing of firms involved in recycling. This information can be used to assist new collection and marketing efforts, and to support existing programs. The listings can also help facilitate networking and cooperative ventures between related businesses.

To help the OWM keep the directory current, please notify us of changes by filling out the update form located in the back of the directory.

Sincerely,

Michael Robertson
Director

The Office of Waste Management (OWM) has prepared this directory in order to provide preliminary information to persons interested in pursuing recycling. In preparing this directory, the OWM has relied on information provided by outside sources. The information provided in this directory may be incomplete, out-of-date or inaccurate and the OWM has not independently evaluated the products and services identified in this directory. The inclusion of a product or service in the directory does not constitute an endorsement or warranty of that product or service; exclusion of a product or service does not constitute disapproval.

IV. Update Form

Commonly Used Abbreviations, Words or Phrases

Metal

MA - Major Appliances (White Goods). Refers to appliances such as washer, refrigerators, or stoves.

F - Ferrous metals, such as steel or iron.

NF - Non-Ferrous metals, includes copper, brass, aluminum.

Cans - Includes aluminum, bi-metal, and tin cans. Listings that include "Cans" accept all three types.

Paper

ONP - Old Newspaper

OCC - Old Corrugated Cardboard

HG - High Grade Office Paper. It includes copier paper, computer paper, and the paper from office paper recycling programs. This is not an industry standard abbreviation.

Plastic

C/I - Commercial Industrial grades. Refers to any or all of the many grades and varieties of plastics used in engineering, manufacturing or any commercial venture. This is not an industry standard abbreviation.

Glass

All Colors - Clear (flint), amber, and green glass are included in this.

Mixed - Unseparated mixture of any of the three types of glass: green, flint or brown.

General

Collection - An industry that only collects recyclables.

Processor - An industry puts recyclables through a process in order to add value to the material. Examples include: baling, shredding, granulating or briquetting, depending upon material type.

End-Use - An industry that uses recyclables as a feedstock in a manufacturing process.

The following section provides individualized listings for firms working with glass, metal, paper or plastic. Each listing provides the company name, address, contact person, county, their role in recycling, phone and fax number.

The listings also include a matrix that details what materials the firm works with (Grades); how the firm processes the materials and what, if any, specifications they have for accepting material (Specifications); and other information regarding the company's recycling operation (Notes).

All listings are in alphabetical order and the following sections can be cross-referenced to this section: Recycling Industry by County; Glass Markets by County; Metal Markets by County; Paper Markets by County; and Plastic Markets by County.

Due to late-arriving information on some firms, they will be listed under the appropriate section, but not be cross-referenced in the Individual Company Listings. The OWM apologizes for any difficulty this may cause.

GLASS

Glass

Container Glass

Container glass is 100 percent recyclable. A glass jar, which could take up to one million years to decompose, can be recycled over and over.

There are three grades of recyclable glass: clear, colored, and mixed. Clear glass is totally transparent, colored is usually green or amber. When glass is recycled, it is ground up or crushed into "cullet" and cleaned. The cullet is then used as feedstock for the glass-making process.

The use of recycled glass has many economic advantages over the use of virgin raw materials; it reduces air pollution and extends furnace life 20 to 30 percent. Glass manufacturers have recognized these savings and increased the use of cullet. Many glass end-users use about 30 percent cullet when making glass products, while some facilities are able to use 80 to 100 percent cullet.

The market for glass in Minnesota remains strong. There is a glass bottle manufacturing plant in Shakopee, and four others in the Upper Midwest that buy a large majority of Minnesota's recyclable glass. But glass containers are being displaced rapidly by plastics due to weight and cost considerations. As this trend continues, the supply of recyclable glass may fall below demand. This will require greater use of virgin material, and probably result in higher glass prices. At the same time, the market share glass holds in packaging could continue to diminish.

Glass is easily recyclable, but it is important to keep the colors separate. Mixed cullet, or glass that has not been separated by color, is not able to be recycled back into glass products. However, it can be used as filler in "glasphalt", which is a type of asphalt or used to make reflective paint.

To prepare glass for recycling, all lids and neck-rings should be removed from the bottle. Rinse all food containers and separate the glass by color. Make sure that only glass containers are included.

Other types of glass

There are a number of glass types other than container glass, they include: plate glass, ceramics, fluorescent tubing, and auto glass. These types of glass cannot be mixed for recycling with glass containers. They also are not as readily recyclable as container glass.

It is possible to recycle plate glass back into plate glass, but the remanufacturing firm must know what chemicals have been used in the original manufacturing process.

This excludes the possibility of instituting a closed-loop post-consumer recycling operation. However, post-consumer plate glass can be recycled and used as feed-stock for reflective strips and paints and fiberglass. Some of these operations will also accept fluorescent tubing with plate glass but that practice is declining due to contaminants present in the fluorescent lights.

While there are a number of plants around the country that recycle plate glass, Minnesota does not have the capability of recycling plate or tube glass.

METALS

In 1989, over 90 million tons of metal were recycled in the United States. That is enough to fill the Metrodome over 1,000 times. While programs for recycling many materials are new, metals recycling has been going on for generations. Mills, furnaces and smelters have recognized the savings present in metals recycling. Recycling aluminum saves 95 percent of the energy it takes to make aluminum from ore; 75 percent energy savings is realized from recycling steel.

Metals can be broadly classified into two grades: ferrous and non-ferrous, (magnetic or non-magnetic). The more common metals that are recycled, particularly post-consumer, are: steel, tin-plated steel, and aluminum. A few of the many other grades include copper, brass, and precious metals.

Metals have a well-developed recycling market infrastructure in Minnesota. Minnesota has over 40 scrap dealers that provide an intermediate market by processing and brokering these collected metals. There is a firm operating electric arc mini-mills in Minnesota. The electric arc mini-mill is a type steelmaking facility designed to use various types of recycled ferrous as a feedstock.

In addition, a steel can processing/detinning mill, which recycles post-consumer tin cans by separating tin from the ferrous metals, now exists in Minnesota. The facility is the largest of its kind in the world. There are also a number of aluminum processors in Minnesota that separate and bale aluminum cans and ship them to smelters for reprocessing. Since metals can be used in many of the same ways as virgin material, the markets for these metals are very strong.

Paper

Wastepaper makes up over 40% of the mixed municipal solid waste stream and thus represents a major recycling and solid waste disposal abatement opportunity.

Recycling paper has many economic and environmental advantages: for every ton of paper recycled, seventeen trees are left standing; recycling uses 80 percent less water and 65 percent less energy than virgin production; and using recycled fiber can be cleaner and less toxic than using virgin fiber in paper production.

But there are also some trade-offs involved with paper recycling. For example, the deinking process creates significant amounts of sludge which need proper disposal. Problems have also been reported with the use of recycled paper in some copiers and printers. As the technology of recycling paper moves forward, these problems must be solved.

While there are over 50 different grades of wastepaper, four of the most common are: Old Newspaper (ONP), Old Corrugated Containers (OCC); High/Office Grade; and Mixed Paper.

Three of these grades, ONP, OCC and High/Office Grade can be readily recycled, sometimes back into their original form--several times over. These three grades can also be used to make tissue and towel products, boxboard for packaging, molded fiber products (egg cartons for example) and, potentially, other paper products as well. The challenge for the paper industry is to develop the technology and know-how to use secondary fiber in the production of higher grades of paper.

Wastepaper is also exported, primarily to Europe and the Pacific Rim where virgin fiber for papermaking is less abundant. There are also a number of micro-markets available for ONP, such as animal bedding and cellulose insulation.

Mixed paper consists of a mixture of unsorted wastepaper grades. Through sortation, usually done by a wastepaper packer/broker, mixed paper can be upgraded into higher, more marketable grades. However, there are significant amounts of mixed paper available that, because of low quality and/or lack of sortation, have limited, or no, markets. Typical users of mixed waste paper are producers of such products as roofing materials and colored construction paper - materials that have a higher tolerance for variation in feedstock quality. As the addition of new deinking capacity increases demand and price for grades such as ONP, producers of mid-quality paper grades such as boxboard may look at substituting less expensive, lower grades of wastepaper. This trend could improve markets for components of the mixed paper stream.

A revolution is taking place, driven by consumer demand, with paper producers of virtually every grade at least studying ways (in many cases for the first time) of using recycled fiber. The wastepaper collection infrastructure is well established and growing. There are numerous new deinking facilities under construction or planned in the United States and Canada. New uses are also being discovered for recyclable paper. For instance, one company has developed a grocery bag made from 20 percent ONP. As these and other developments take place, the demand for wastepaper will continue to grow.

PLASTICS

Plastics

There are six basic plastic resin types in the municipal solid waste stream. They are:

Society of Plastics Industry symbols	Plastic resin types	Packaging application
 PETE	Polyethylene Terephthalate	Beverage containers, boil-in-pouches, processed meat packages
 HDPE	High Density Polyethylene	Milk bottles, detergent bottles, oil bottles, toys, bag films
 V	Poly Vinyl Chloride	Food wraps, vegetable oil bottles, blister packaging
 LDPE	Low Density Polyethylene	Shrink-wrap films, bag films, garment bags
 PP	Polypropylene	Margarine and yogurt containers, caps for containers, wrapping to replace cellophane
 PS	Polystyrene	Disposable plastic silverware, egg cartons, fast food trays
 OTHER	Other	Multi-resin containers

With the exception of 7 Other, all of the resins listed are recyclable in Minnesota with PET and HDPE having the most demand.

HDPE can be divided into several different categories. Some end-users will only accept HDPE if it is separated into milk jug HDPE and non-milk jug HDPE (detergent bottles, base cups for 2-liter bottles). This separation allows the end-user to use the milk jug HDPE for a wide array of end products. Since this plastic is not colored, it is more versatile in its uses.

Other examples of recycled plastic products include: irrigation and drainage piping, office products, garden edging, plastic lumber, milk crates, and speed bumps. Recycled plastic is also used in carpets, bathtubs, and as fill in sleeping bags and ski jackets. Plastic markets that need to be developed include: closed-loop markets, and recycled plastics capable of direct food contact.

The plastics recycling market is supply driven. That is, the amount of plastic that is recycled is limited by the amounts of collected plastics available to recyclers. So as the supply of recyclable plastic grows, the processing and reclamation capacity should grow proportionally.

While growth and change in the plastics recycling field has been extensive, problems remain: these include lack of material, and undeveloped collection systems to ensure material supplies, inadequate availability of sortation and reclamation capacity, and limitations on end product uses. Plastics collection programs should be designed to address these issues.

When recycling plastics, the resins must be separated by type, much like different grades of paper are separated. Because of the variety of plastics in the waste stream, identification of different resins may be a problem during processing. To address this, the plastics industry developed a voluntary coding system help identify resin types during sortation. An imprint of the symbols listed above appears on the bottom of various plastic products.

It is also possible, but more difficult, to separate plastics by determining how the product was made. An example of how to distinguish unlabeled PVC from PET-- look at the bottom of the bottle, if there is a small knob, the product is PET, if there is a "smile" or horizontal mark, it is PVC. These marks are results of the blow-molding and injection-molding processes used to make the product.

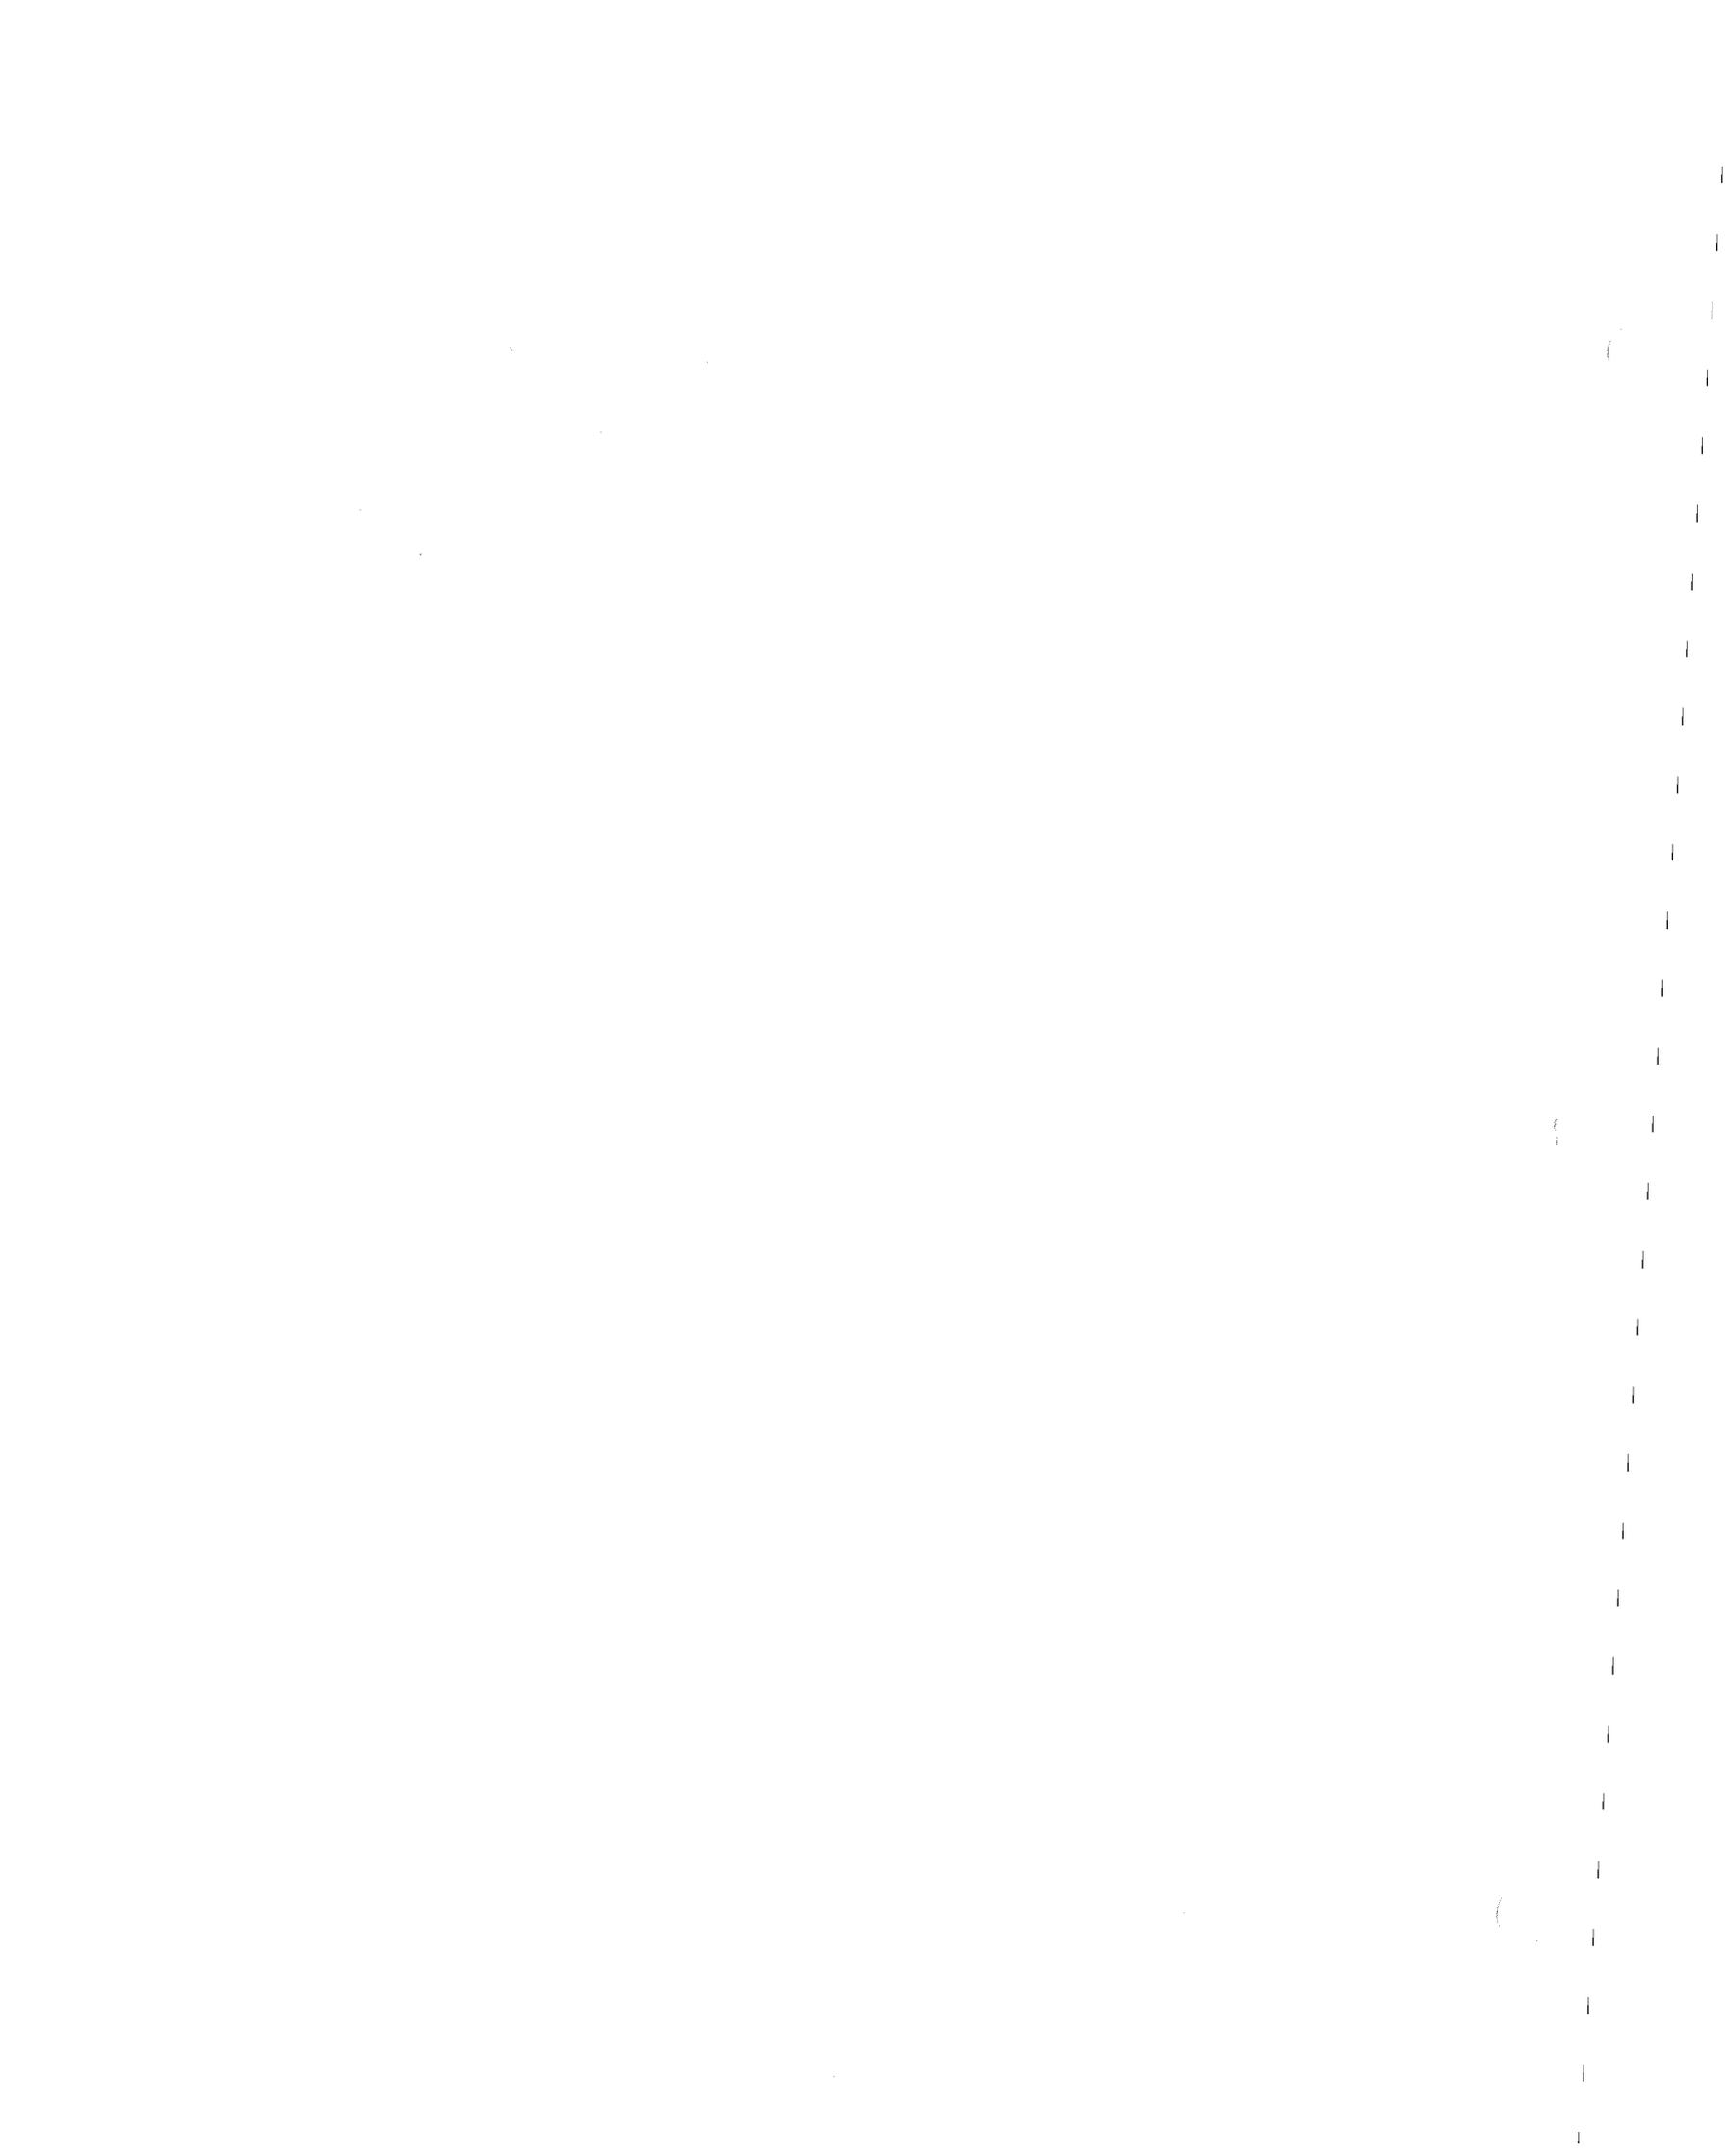

One hurdle to proper separation is mixed-resin containers. Many plastic containers and packages are made of multi-resin plastics. In manufacturing these products more than one type of resin is used; often with one type is sandwiched between layers of a different type. Since the technology does not exist to separate these resins from one another, there is little possibility these containers can be recycled into anything other than a low-value end product. While there is a pilot project in the United States to recycle these multi-resin containers, there is no existing market infrastructure for them as yet.

Because plastics, bottles in particular, are so bulky, it is difficult to collect, transport, and store plastics profitably. One way to improve the economics of plastic recycling is to employ a value-added process such as shredding, washing and pelletizing. Shredding involves grinding the plastic into small flakes which can easily be cleaned in a wash line. When this process is done by a processor or reclaimer, the end-user can skip this step in the remanufacturing process. This reclamation makes the plastic more marketable, and valuable. The final step in plastic value-added processes is to pelletize the plastic. In pelletizing plastic, the flaked resin is melted and formed into small pellets of pure resin. Each phase of upgrading material is reflected in the price end users will pay: pelletized earns more than flaked; and flaked earns more than baled.

Some manufacturers and brokers will accept loose plastic, but most require that it at least be baled. Before entering into a sale, learn what, if any, the processing shipping and material specification requirements exist.

Plastics recycling is growing and there are new developments in the field regularly. Much work needs to be done yet in education, collection, labelling, processing and the development of uses for mixed plastic.

USED
AUTO PARTS

Auto Parts

Automobiles and their parts can be reused or recycled. Reusing includes buying a used car and buying second-hand parts from an auto parts store or scrap yard. Reusing these parts conserves resources by decreasing the number of new parts that are needed.

The metal in automobiles can also be recycled. The cars are first crushed and then shredded. The non-metal waste, or "fluff", is then separated from the metal scrap and disposed of. The metal scrap is further separated into ferrous and non-ferrous. Both can be recycled into new metal products.

Cars that have been fitted with air-bags are more difficult to recycle. The air-bags use a propellant, sodium azide, which is highly poisonous. Before the scrap metal from an auto can be recovered, the propellant container must be removed and properly managed.

The following businesses salvage and sell second-hand auto parts.

BARREL
RECONDITIONING

Barrel Reconditioning

Many barrels (55 gallon drums) contain materials that prevent further usage of the barrel without the material being completely removed from the barrel. Barrel reconditioning is the process by which metal barrels which contained hazardous or dangerous materials, be they chemicals or paints, for example, can be cleaned or reconditioned for reuse.

There are two ways of reconditioning barrels; the material can be burnt out of the barrel, or the barrel can be washed in a caustic bath made up of common hydroxides. After the barrel is cleaned, all the old paint is removed from the barrel to eliminate any potential residuals. The barrel is then tested for strength and usability. If it is still usable, it is repainted and then is ready to be reused.

Burning barrels clean can pose potential air pollution problems and is becoming increasingly less common. All of the listed firms use a caustic wash to recondition the barrel.

Reconditioning barrels not only keeps potentially toxic barrels out of the waste stream, it can also be a money saver for businesses. By reconditioning barrels, a business pays only for the reconditioning process rather than disposal of the old barrel and the cost of a new one. It is possible to recondition barrels more than once.

All the listed firms will recondition metal 55-gallon drums, some will also provide disposal for unreconditionable metal drums and plastic barrels.

SPENT LEAD ACID BATTERIES

Batteries

There are two types of batteries that are recyclable: spent lead-acid batteries and "button" batteries.

Lead acid batteries (the type used in automobiles) are recovered for their lead content. The plastic casing can also be recycled. By law, any retailer that sells auto batteries in Minnesota is required to accept up to five used batteries from their customers. There are also some scrap yards that will accept them.

Other types of household batteries present a more difficult recycling problem. The "button" batteries used in watches, hearing aids and calculators contain high amounts of mercury and present a serious hazard if disposed of improperly. As with lead-acid batteries, many stores that sell these batteries also collect them for recycling, although it is not required by law. The mercury in these batteries is recovered and reused by battery manufacturers.

"Flashlight type" household batteries are not currently recyclable. There are no known markets for these batteries in the United States, but there are some pilot projects for recycling in other countries. Some collection and storage programs exist around the state. In addition, some programs are disposing of household batteries as hazardous waste. Without markets, collection and management program costs will continue to escalate.

While the amount of mercury in these batteries has been drastically reduced in the last 20 years, they can still pose problems if they are discarded with other wastes, especially if those wastes are managed at a waste-to-energy facility.

There are several pilot projects for household battery collection around the state. The following listings are only for firms that collect or process lead acid batteries.

WASTE TIRES

Waste Tires

In 1985 Minnesota passed a law banning the landfilling of waste tires and initiated its waste tire program (the first in the nation) to deal with Minnesota's old tire dump problem, and also develop a way to manage the on-going flow of more than four million waste tires a year.

Since 1988, the MPCA has helped clean up more than 18 tire dumps containing approximately 2.6 million waste tires. The MPCA plans to clean up more than 30 tire dumps in the next year under the Tire Dump Cleanup Program. It is estimated that by 1993, all tire dumps over 10,000 waste tires will be cleaned up.

After clean up, these tires are recycled. Tires are shredded and can be used burned, they have a very high BTU value, or can be used as road grade or in rubberized asphalt. There is a firm in South Dakota that used chipped tires as a cover material for their reserve coal stockpiles. The tire shreds help control erosion of coal from the piles. Tires can also be re-used through retreading. All tires used on State of Minnesota vehicles are retreaded for reuse.

For more information on the MPCA's work with waste tire management or a list of registered tire haulers, please contact Jim Kelly, MPCA Waste Tire Management Unit at (612)296-8111 or (800)228-1339.

The firms listed in this section are either collection or processing centers. The collection centers will take household quantities (four or less) of tires only. If there are questions regarding disposal of large amounts of tires, please call the MPCA.

USED OIL

Used Oil

As defined by state law, used oil means any oil that has been refined from crude oil, used, and as a result of such use, contaminated by physical or chemical impurities. Automotive lubricating fluids (crankcase oil and transmission fluids), and spent industrial oils are all considered used oil.

When disposed of in the trash, dumped onto the ground or poured down storm sewers, used oil presents an environmental hazard. Improperly disposed, used oil poses a threat to surface and groundwater.

For these reasons, it is illegal to dispose of used oil anywhere in or on the land. Rather, used oil should be brought to a used oil collection location. Any retail outlet that sells new lubricating oil must either have a used oil collection tank available for use by the public, or must post a notice indicating the nearest used oil collection location.

95% of the used oil commercially collected in Minnesota is used as an industrial fuel to heat asphalt prior to application. The used oil is a less expensive substitute for virgin fuel oil.

In some states, used oil can also be re-refined into new lubricating oil or processed into on-specification fuel oil. The OWM is currently exploring alternative end-use market options for used oil, including the feasibility of establishing a state or regional used oil re-refining facility.

WOOD WASTE

Wood Waste

Wood waste can be anything from branches downed by a windstorm to a broken, unusable pallet or sawdust. With Minnesota's large wood products industry, the amount and types of wood waste tend to be large and varied. Disposal of these wastes is often an expensive proposition.

Wood waste is often bulky, taking up much space in landfills. While it is difficult to recycle wood waste in the traditional sense of the word, there are a number of firms that work with wood waste. Some of these firms include pallet reconditioners and chippers. Pallet reconditioners rebuild, restore and resell broken or unusable pallets. Chippers flake or chip the wood and use it in incinerators or it can be used as mulch, landfill cover, or as a bulking agent in sludges.

Sawdust can also be difficult to dispose of or recycle. It does have commercial applications, but it is uneconomical to ship it long distances due to the cost of transportation. It can be used as landfill cover, but has limited effectiveness due to blowing.

There are a number of businesses that work with wood wastes. The listed firms may be able to help arrange for disposal other than landfilling.
